REDACTED VERSION

1 about, there might be a case where somebody is switching
2 service providers and they're going from one service
3 provider to another for plain old telephone service, is 4 that an example of what you're thinking about in that 5 broad universe?

6 A. Yes, that would be an example of what I'm 7 thinking about.

11 So in this particular case, I have a whole
12 section in my report that talks about, you know, where 13 the demarc point was. And -- and there doesn't seem, 14 from my read of the materials and my understanding of 15 how call flows work, I don't think there was a confusion
16 between Comtech as to where the demarc was at. And I
17 don't think there was a confusion with -- with 18 CenturyLink because there was -- I think they understood
19 where one party's responsibilities ended and the other 20 one had to take over and respond with, you know, what 21 I've referred to there as an "acknowledge message."

22 Q. And we'll get into what both parties were 23 anticipating. But for now, I want to -- I want to focus 24 on why is it important that that point of demarcation be 25 identified. I think it is an important concept, it
