Your new slamming rules do not recognize and correct the enormous incentive to disobey them. If all a LD company has to do is reverse charges when someone complains about slamming than there still tens of millin "money for nothing" up for grabs by fraudulently billing phone customers something just below theri 'nusiance level' since most people don't have the time or patience to complain.

You need to establish monetary damages for victims to remove the incentive for LD carriers to ignore the rules. If they had to pay every slamming victim, say $50, then it would be worth it to victims to complain and collect the $50. It would no longer be worth it to the carriers to risk $50 in order to collect a fee bucks in access fees.
