I am opposed to a smart meter entirely. The whole point of offering opt-out is to get away from the electric meter. I want to continue using my analog meter and I absolutely refuse to have an electric meter of any kind put on my house. I've heard inklings on these smart meter issues and started doing my own research on google. I've been seeing a lot of class-action lawsuits from Oregon to Canada and I absolutely refuse to have one on my house. Avista's opt-out option is to have a fully digital meter that is just not hooked up to communicate and it defeats the whole purpose of opting out. The issues with these smart meters is that they're susceptible to voltage fluctuations and spikes.
