To the Commission.

This is my comment regarding your latest rules. I have a temp permit for more than six months now. I want my permanent authority. There is one thing that concerns me regarding your rules. That is the operating capital rule or "fitness" as you call it. As far as I can see I'm fit to do my job. I may not own a fifth generation moving company, and as such I don't have the kind of capital these companies may have. I only started this year legally registered with UTC. Before you guys came knocking I did my job well, and continue to do it to this day. I have excellent reviews from many customers. My services to the public is mostly from Craigslist. I have worked for more than three years as a mover. I attended training for my CDL, and know how to drive a truck. I have an excellent driving record, and pay my insurance every month. I only have one truck, and I keep it maintained.

If not having thousands of dollars in the bank is grounds for my denial to permanent authority, then I think this is wrong. To keep me from doing my job cause I don't have enough money for you to consider me "fit" is grossly undermining. I paid you my fee, and complied with all your rules. I would like to play ball with you if you let me play in your court, but if you don't, then you give me no other option than to challenge you. I hope it don't come to this, but it's my livelihood we're talking about. From day one you have been more of a hindrance than of any help. Don't make this more complicated than what it really is. Really think about it. All we're talking about is a guy and his truck going out to move local residential homes. This is not rocket science. All it takes is a little sweat and diligence to get the job done.

If there is one bad apple out there is not me. The fact that you get on Cragislist and condemn every small time mover is wrong. Many of us are hard workers trying to make a living.

Sincerely
