Prior to entering into a related party transaction, the related person must provide written notice to the Chief Financial Officer describing the facts and circumstances of the proposed transaction. He or she may approve any transaction that, evaluated together with such person's other transactions with us, would not require disclosure. If the transaction, evaluated together with such person's other transactions with us, would be required to be disclosed, the proposed transaction will be submitted to the audit committee for consideration of the relevant facts and circumstances including: the benefits to us; the availability of other sources for comparable products or services; the terms of the transaction; the arms' length nature of the arrangement and, if applicable, the impact on a director's independence. The audit committee will approve only those transactions that are in, or not inconsistent with, the best interests of our shareholders and us. If a transaction is required to be and is approved by the audit committee, the non-interested members of the board of directors will then review and evaluate the transaction based on the same criteria.
