

Dearest Kimberly Harris,

Thank you so much for your commitment to retiring the coal-using facilities of PSE. The climate is changing, and it's admirable that the company is changing along with it. The 100% renewable campaign will benefit not only the people of Washington, but all organisms around the world who are being hurt and killed by our carbon emissions as they further contribute to the greenhouse effect.

As a young girl, I spent a lot of time in the Pacific Northwest crabbing, clamming, fishing and hiking. I was a socially awkward and anxious girl, but nature never failed to calm me, even when my homelife was drastically chaotic. After growing up with the sweet smell of pine in my hair, and dirt always under my fingernails, it saddens me to realize that the children of the future may not have access to the natural wonders I once knew. I am committed to preserving our planet. Our lives will not get worse when we choose to tackle climate change. It will only get better.

As a CEO of PSE, the third biggest polluting plant in the United States, you have the unique ability to save lives. 50% of all land species are being threatened with endangerment and extinction within the next century. I care about climate change because I care about nature, and because I care about you, as a fellow human being. Please do not be a bystander.

Fight climate change like your world depends on it.

Because it does.

Best wishes,
Eloise Steere
