Dear Mr. King,

A "reasonably likely worst-case spill of oil" could impact the lives of many children living in towns along these very busy rail lines.

Washougal, WA has 5 schools within one mile of the tracks. Jemtegaard Middle School is only about 300 yards off the track. There is no alternate access to this school. If a derailment happened near the school, first responders would have a very difficult time getting resources to these children.

I would hope the UTC would seriously evaluate the many places like Washougal that are in harms way regarding these volatile mile-long oil trains.

To make it more personal Mr. King, do any of your loved ones live near these rail lines? Best regards, Terry Neal
