We would have to make changes to our system. I was told that the benefits of the cap would likely not exceed the costs to make the changes.

A question was raised this morning on the issue of prior obligation, that we need to pass on to you for an answer: if there is a cap to the number of prior obligations allowed per customer per year, do you expect to have to make changes to or adapt your company's accounting system to keep track of how many prior obligations does each customer have per year?

Thanks,
