Subject: Smart Meters

This has just come to my attention. I find this a sneaky insidious attempt to pull one over on the people who do not live in Seattle; To set a precedent. But we have heard about the way Seattle Light forces people to get the smart meters from the TV-news and more precisely from actual friends and neighbors who do live or own property inside Seattle city limits. I have a neighbor who had a PSE or other electrition try to sell her one for her less than 10 yr old house. She refused. After getting up close and personal in checking out my own meter, I found myself getting nauseous in a matter of minutes. As long as we have to pay more to get a smart meter and can say NO, I will do so. These meters could be weaponized. I would rather go back to having a guy walk across my deck, past the kitchen window, to read my meter periodically. To hear my other neighbor report about how long it takes for Seattle Light come to check out a problem on their electric meter in their condo, it takes 6-8 wks to get it "read" and another 6-8 wks to figure out the problem. Why were they overcharged for time they were out of the U.S.? This is not electronic sophistication. It is a Technological farce in Poor management, lack of concern for the public health and power control and bleeding more money from the pockets of the uninformed public.

Sincerely,
Donna Alber
